

Can I Ask You A Question?

A professional development workshop with the Center for Urban Pedagogy (CUP)

Learn how to engage students and make learning more tangible with this hands-on workshop on incorporating interviews into your educational practice, using CUP's award-winning methodologies.

Why interviews?

Interviews are a great way to connect learning to the real world, engage students in critical thinking, and help them develop job skills like public speaking—all while learning about topics central to your curriculum.

But how do you set up appropriate interviews, prepare students effectively, and get the most out of your interviewees?

Find out through this hands-on professional development training with the Center for Urban Pedagogy (CUP)!

What will I learn?

Interviewing is at the heart of CUP's award-winning, project-based learning programs. In this two-hour long workshop, educators will:

- Understand how interviewing can promote critical thinking and analysis
- Engage in hands-on activities
- Learn how to use interviews as a form of research, how to develop strong interview questions, and how to create roles to engage all learners
- Identify ways to incorporate interviewing into your own curricula and educational practice

Who is this for?

This program is for educators of any kind, including teachers, teaching artists, graduate students, and others interested in developing their youth education practices.

Who is CUP?

CUP is a non-profit organization that uses art and design to increase meaningful civic engagement, particularly among historically underrepresented communities.

CUP projects demystify the urban policy and planning issues that impact our communities, so that more individuals can better participate in shaping them. We believe that increasing understanding of how these systems work is the first step to more meaningful and more diverse community participation, and to achieving equity.
